General feedback (5 points):

A header would have been nice. But the reference pictures are very nicely captioned!

For in text citations, you should include the date of publication along with the last name, which you've already included (Merek's spelling is also inconsistent between the in-text citation in paragraph two and your "Works Cited" list—is it Marek or Merek?).

The second and third citations are to journals/articles and shouldn't have a link. Also, the link you provided for the New York Times article doesn't work.

The podcast you cited should probably be cited as a website with the following format: Webpage name. Online. Webpage author. Available: webpage address. Updated date [accessed date].

The first paragraph is a good attention grabber, but it doesn't really communicate the contents of your article/the study (the study is a little deeper than just the discovery of an especially long millepede). Maybe just elaborate they've discovered a "new genus" of millepede.

Your explanation of their method for collecting data was very easy to understand and thorough.

Maybe elaborate on what "fixed" means in your third paragraph. Also in third paragraph,

I don't think you need to include "particularly" when you write "particularly combined."

Nice that you included a conclusion explaining this discovery's relevancy!

Overall assessment (excellent, good, needs improvement): Excellent/Good 😊
